MASS MEETING IN THE RIGHTEENTH ASSEMBLY DISTRICT.

A large and enthusiastic meeting was held last evening at Ebbit Hall, under the anspices of the XVIIIth Assembly District Union Republican Association of the Twenty-first Ward. A large number of halls was possent. Early in the evening a company of juvenile soldiers—orphans of Union soldiers—entered the hall bearing the American flag and making a fine appearance. They sang a number of patriotic sours during the meeting.

Mr. Christopher Pallmann presided, and introduced Judge H. C. Warmouth of Lodislana as the first speaker. Judge Warmouth desired, be said to impress upon his heavers the necessity for extending the protection of the Government over the loyal citizens of the South. A great mistake, he thought, had been made far back in the political history of the country in attempting to concilitate the South by putning in office men who would be in a measure acceptable there. The same mistake had been made in the selection of Andrew Johnson of Tennesses by the Hallimore Convention. Had not this been done the Issues that are now distracting the country would have been readily settled by the Congress of the victurious North and the country would have been readily settled by the Congress of the victurious North and the country would have been readily settled by the Congress of the victurious North and the country would have been appeared from their vanquisked armies, and showed that they were at that time ready to accept any terms whatever that might have been imposed. But when President Johnson had issued his North Carolina Proclamation and his Amnesty Proclamation, in which he presumed to precific conditions for the return of the Releich to power, their tone and spirit had suddenly become again as disloyal and as intelerant of Thionism as ever. The andacious usurpations of the power of Congress by President Johnson had is an adapted the continuance of this bodie to know the feeting the Releich to power. men of the South made their solemn protest. Judge Warmouth, illustrated his argument by an account of the state of affairs in Louisiann, as it came under his observation. Shevery, he said, had been practically redstablished. Freedom of speech was denied to those who differed with the prevailing popular sentiment. Under a raining of one of the lebsel judges, men, had been indicted, tried, and sent to the penitentiary for making speeches in fas or of negro saffrage, on the ground that this was inciting negroes to insure them, the related numerous other instances of the maintaininist ration of the laws, in order to persecute Union field. He declared that Congress could not have demanded less of these dangerous and dicloyal people than it had. The question was not whether the representatives claiming admission to Congress very love.

They were committed to await due process of law.

A man amoust Hirsum Coon, a desperate character, employed by Henry Laker, a farmer, in a fit of passion, selzed an ax and sent the weapon mashing through the skull of his employers wife and into the brain, producing a mortal wound. He had been (asyx The Times) to the village during the aftermoon, and returned about the time the family were at ten. When he entered the house, Mrs. Laker made some remark to him, when he angrily inquired if she wanted a row with him? Mrs. L. replied 'no, and did not pursue the conversation further. Coon turned upon his heel and left the bouse. No attention was paid to him, and no thought entered the head of Mr. Laker or his wife that any trouble would result from the conversation, although they observed Coon's angry look as he passed out.

It seems the villain went directly to the wood-shed and procured an ax. Armed with this terrible weapon, he restatered the house and walked directly up to Mrs. Laker, who was earling her supper. Mr. Laker was also at the table, and all unconscious of the intentions of Coon, not even noticing the ax which he held in his hand, continued on in the quiet enjoy ment of the evening men. In a moment, he saw the monater raise the weapon, and perceiving the glimmer of the polished steel in of the evening meal. In a moment, he saw the monster raise the weapon, and perceiving the glimmer of the polished steel in the light of the candle, leaped upon him and as he supposed, averted the blow aimed at his wife's head. Sciring Coon, he threw him down, dragged him to the door, and kicked him out of the house. All this while Mr. Laker was uncenscious of his wife's fate. Turning around, he observed that she had fallen over, and upon going up to her, discovered the ax still sticking in her head, having cleft skull and brain, producing a mortal wound. The monster fled to the Williamstown Mountains, whither the citizens have pursued him, and hope to effect his capture.
